

Latin I Syllabus

Term: 2011-2012

Teacher: Mr. Thomas G. Wilkes

Course description: In Latin I the approach is a traditional grammatical one, employing the renowned text Wheelock's Latin. The advantages of Wheelock are numerous. The immediate use of ancient authors rather than of contrived Latin, and of ancient history, with an emphasis on the life and writings of Cicero, remains the very best preparation students can have for reading Latin at an advanced level. One other major advantage is that Wheelock can be employed in such a way that it can be adapted to a mixture of students of differing ability. It enables the student with no previous knowledge of Latin to begin at the beginning, while simultaneously providing a thorough review, within the context of a fresh approach which is sufficiently challenging, for the student who has had Latin previously. Instruction will be individualized as much as possible. With Wheelock, one can also employ a wonderful array of practice web sites geared to the text, as well as supplementary employing texts such as Groton's & May's volume of historical stories in Latin entitled 38 Latin stories or, at the more advanced level, The Wheelock Reader and other similar readers.

Students with previous knowledge of Latin will encounter a considerable amount of review and are taken through all of the various noun forms and verb tenses, and they may find themselves working as peer tutors with students for whom the material is new or less familiar. They will review rapidly, however, leading to the eventual study of the Subjunctive (which none of them have encountered previously), late in the second semester. With Wheelock, even experienced students will also encounter new vocabulary and find that their minds are engaged with Roman authors in a new, more subtle way. In addition, through their readings and in class discussion, they will be exposed to the broad sweep of the thousand year history of the Roman Republic and Empire, to the stories of Cincinnatus and Hannibal, Cicero and Caesar, the Pax Romana and the spread of early Christianity. But chiefly, all students will gain a gradual feel for the Latin language, an ability to read longer and longer passages of ancient text. In addition, all students will take the American Classical League's National Latin Exam in the spring of the year.
